~~DÁIL~~

“The assembling at the new Irish Parliament was awaited with keenest excitement everywhere. The big questions on the lips of everyone these days was ‘What would happen? Would the British try to prevent the meeting? Would they use force to do so?’ ”

Seán T. Ó Ceallaigh

“The thing in one sense was futile and unreal...a solemn act of defiance of the British Empire by a body of young men who have not the slightest notion of that Empire’s power and resources and not a particle of experience in the conduct of public affairs.”

The Irish Times

“Ordaímid nach bhfuil de chumhacht ag éinne ach amháin ag na Teachtaí tofa ag muintir na hÉireann dlíthe a dhéanamh gur dual do mhuintir na hÉireann géilleadh dóibh, agus nach bhfuil de pharlaimint ann go mbeidh an náisiún umhal dó ach amháin Dáil Éireann.”

An Fhaisnéis Neamhspleáchais, Dáil Éireann, an 21 Eanáir 1919

“The British government apparently intends to ignore the Sinn Fein republic until it undertakes to enforce laws that are in conflict with those established by the British; then the trouble is likely to begin.”

*Edward Pickard,
The Yerington Times*

“Never was the past so near, or the present so brave, or the future so full of hope...We did see Cathal Brugha presiding and we repeated the words of the declaration after him, and we felt we had burned our boats now. There was no going back.”

Máire Comerford

“The end of it will be that these 73 devils will very soon go bag and baggage over to Westminster.”

*An Marascal Machaire
John French*

D’imigh an Náisiún Gaelach síos ag Cionn tSáile trí chéad bliain ó shin, agus an 21ú Eanáir, 1919, do thóg sé a cheann arís. Ar an lá sin, d’fhógair teachtairí na nGael don domhan mór gur saor-stát Éire”

Nationality

“From that time onward interest in the doings of the British Parliament and its personnel, for so long prime items of news in Ireland and the national press, decreased strikingly and, in a remarkably short time, faded away altogether.”

Kevin O’Sheil
